

Email Policy

Vermillion Federal Credit Union strongly recommends to everyone not to send email containing personal information. The reason for the recommendation is for the protection of your personal identity. Emails can be intercepted during the transmission process to their intended recipient. Whoever does this "intercepting" may use the information, contained in the email, to gain your personal identity. Personal information may include, but is not limited to: social security number(s), account/subaccount number(s), PIN(s) or VFCU MasterCard credit card or debit card number(s).

Vermillion Federal Credit Union does/will not take responsibility for any emails that are transmitted containing personal information. If someone wishes to send an email containing personal information to any VFCU owned email account, the email is handled with the security and processing measures provided by the credit union. These security and processing measures shall take place once the email is received and not while in transit. We look forward to receiving emails from our members and future members and enjoy helping or answering questions whenever it is possible. We just feel that you should be aware of the issues of sending any email containing such information as stated above.

By sending an email to Vermillion Federal Credit Union YOU AGREE that you have read and understand the above statement.
